

MSU DETROIT CENTER

Where Community and University Meet

Michigan State University has long had a presence in Metro Detroit through its strong regional programming and large numbers of alumni residing in Wayne, Oakland, and Macomb counties.

The MSU Detroit Center, located on Woodward Avenue, in the heart of Detroit, is a hub for an array of community programs, research activities, and special events that facilitate the university's engagement in SE Michigan. The facility is housed in the 22,000-square-foot Albert Kahn Building, which is available for use by MSU-related groups/units, university partners, and other community organizations.

MSU offers practical support to community development by creating collaborative partnerships among a broad range of disciplines and with external constituents. Several university-based programs operate out of the MSU Detroit Center.
